Traditional production according to alchemical principles

For the production of the PuraVita Bitte(r)schön Tincture a classic alchemical method is applied. The aim of this traditional technique is to reunite both the plant constituents and the natural minerals of the plants used.

The production process includes several coordinated steps:

- Alcoholic plant extraction: The selected herbs are macerated in high-quality alcohol, gently extracting their soluble plant constituents.
- Calcination: The remaining plant material is intentionally ashed under controlled conditions. This produces plant-derived minerals in the form of a fine ash.
- Mineral extraction: The ash is dissolved in purified water so that the contained minerals can be recovered.
- Reunion: Finally, the plant extract and the mineral extract are brought together. The result is a holistically produced herbal tincture made according to traditional alchemical methods.

Selected bitter herbs

The formula of the PuraVita Bitte(r)schön Tincture combines proven bitter plants from different regions of the world:

- Wormwood – one of Europe’s best-known bitter herbs, characterised by its distinctly sharp taste.
- Artichoke – a long-cultivated plant of the Mediterranean region, whose leaves have been prized for centuries.
- Yarrow – a native wild plant with an aromatic scent, which has been part of many herbal recipes for generations.
- Dandelion – a versatile plant with distinctive leaves and bright yellow flowers.
- Calamus – an aromatic marsh plant used for a long time in traditional herbal preparations across Europe and Asia.
- Gentian – a typical alpine plant, known for its intense bitter flavour and long-standing tradition.
- Haronga – originates from the tropical regions of Africa and is firmly rooted in traditional plant knowledge there.
- Angelica – an aromatic umbellifer that was already cultivated in historic monastery gardens.
