Description

Manganese energised – the trace element with the highest bioavailability

Manganese is an essential trace element involved in a variety of enzymatic processes in the body. Supplementation with manganese should be given particular attention, especially during high stress levels, diets high in sugar or alcohol consumption.

Energised – what does that mean?

Conventional manganese products are manufactured from manganese sulphate. In contrast, WOSCHA Mangan energised contains manganese gluconate. The advantage: the trace element can be utilised much more effectively. Through a special manufacturing process manganese is then milled together with itself and thus energised. This results in excellent bioavailability.

The addition of calcium supports manganese's function for bone and perfectly rounds off this product.
